The Dandelion

The golden blossom of the dandelion loves the sun. It only opens up when the sun rises. It closes when it is shady or dark. Sometimes there are little stems that get up in the wind.

At other times you may just see green dandelion leaves with sharply pointed thorns. If you look at a dandelion throughout the year, you may see how it changes during the seasons.

How The Dandelion Changes

The Dandelion starts out as a seed under ground. In spring it comes up and makes many seeds. When the sun gets stronger, out of the seeds come yellow dandelions. When the sun has gotten a bit stronger and the weather is favorable, the soft down of the seeds comes up and then it starts all over again.
